Cape Town Regrets Cut in Transkei Tie

CAPE TOWN, April 11 (AP-South Africa expressed regret to-day that the first black tribal bome-land it created, Transkei, has cut its links with it in an apparent bid for world recognition.

Healey Budget Package Would Cut U.K. Taxes

LONDON, April 11 (UPI)-Chancellor of the Exchequer Denis Healey, in a national budget package which he described as "a recipe for success for Britain," announced today a £2.5-billion ($4.75-billion) package of tax cuts, pension increases and measures designed to slash unemployment.

He said that his aim was to stimulate the economy, control inflation

U.S. and Russia to Discuss Banning Killer Satellites

By Murrey Marder

WASHINGTON, April 11 (WP)—The United States and the Soviet Union will begin talks next month on banning hunter-killer sa-tellites in space, Secretary of State

Cyrus Vance said yesterday.

Mr. Vance confirmed in a speech before the American Society of Newspaper Editors that the Soviet Union, as previously reported, has agreed to the U.S. proposal to discuss "suspending anti-satellite testing and keeping space open for free and peaceful use by all." "Evidence that the Soviet Union is developing an anti-satellite capa-bility is disturbing," Mr. Vance

Although the United States is prepared to protect itself "against such a threat," he said, it is much preferable to prevent an anti-satel-

Mr. Vance also announced that the Soviet Union has agreed to proceed with talks on restraining the sales of convencional weapons. Exploratory discussions about the possibility of limiting arms sales were held in December. In reviewing the state of U.S.-Soviet arms control before his departure tomorrow for a trip to Africa and to the Soviet Union, Mr. Vance cautioned against exaggerated ex-pectations about what arms control can achieve.

A year ago, Mr. Vance's first mission to Moscow brought the administration into collision with the Soviet Union over U.S. proposals for "deep cuts" in strategic arms levels. This time, Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev has charged time. administraton with displaying "in-decision and inconsistency" in the Strategic Arms Limitation Talks . Mr. Vance said yesterday that "if we judge arms control measures against unrealistic standards, we may lose the possibility of making any practical progress.

No arms control agreement," he said, will eliminate all the challenges that confront allied forces,

"dramatically reduce our defense budget," or "guarantee stabil-ity in the U.S.-Soviet relationship." But they can, he said, "contribute significantly to reducing the pros-pect of war."

Substantial Progress "We have made substantial progress over the past year" toward a new SALT agreement, Mr. Vance said, but "important differences still remain." "I do not expect to wrap up a SALT agreement" in the Moscow talks later this month. Mr. Vance said in response to questions, but he added that he anticipates progress in narrowing differences.

Avoiding setting any time limts on agreement. Mr. Vance said that the administration is ready to negotiate "as long as it takes to achieve a SALT agreement which enhances our security and that of our allies." Mr. Vance reiterated that he will attempt "no linkage between the negotiation of a SALT agreement and the activities of the Soviet Un-ion in Africa." He said however, that he expects some discussion about the "large numbers of Cuban and Soviet forces" in the Horn of

But nowhere, except perhaps among some top British leaders who enjoy excellent relations with Mr. Carter, does the President seem to evoke clearly positive comments in private discussions. With the public, in press commentary and among many politicians here, the President seems to be taking a public-relations beating. French and West German officials say that a private and com-mon uncertainty about the President's views, leadership skills and his unpredictability have greatly reinforced the relationship between German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing.

U.S. and French diplomats, in particular, are concerned about U.S. West German relations. The view that there are few, if any, peo-

The fear is that the number of problems that have suddenly, yet steadily, arisen in Bonn-Washing-ton relations under the new administration will at some point alienate the Germans, or lead to political changes here and a conservative assumption of power not foreseen by the White House.

"Someday, we simply are going to turn around, and the Germans won't be there when we need them, said a U.S. diplomat. Actually, in West Germany, such fears seem exaggerated. The German political scene is stable, and the Bonn government, at least, seems to be taking its quarrels with the United States in stride.

But the situation could easily change. For the most part, President Carter is being portrayed harshly and with mistrust in major,

Thus, it is with special frustration that Europeans watch a new strategic arms agreement con-tinue to clude the superpowers while the President makes a tough speech of warning to the Russians at Wake Forest University, and then. 10 days later, postpones a de-

MANILA, April 11 (AP)—President Ferdinand Marcos has or-dered the release of more than 500 persons detained for participating in a peaceful march Sunday protesting the "death" of democracy in the Philippines, an official an-

The announcement said that Sen. Tanada and the six others, including candidates Francisco Rodrigo, also a former senator, Teopisto Guingona, Ernesto Rondon and Aquilino Pimentel, were the leaders and organizers of Sunday's march. It said that the participants openly advocated the use of violence against the government.

Mr. Marcos's decision was in accordance with a national policy of conciliation to bring together all the various factions in society, the announcement said. It described most of those arrested as first offenders who probably did not know the full implication of their participation in the march.

ATHENS, April 11 (AP)—A meeting between the secretaries-general of the Greek and Turkish Foreign Ministries, scheduled in Ankara on April 14, has been indefinitely postponed, diplomatic sources reported today.

The contacts at the secretary-general level were designed to continue a dialogue over sensitive issues started between Premiers Con-stantine Caramanlis of Greece and Bulent Ecevit of Turkey at Mon-treux, Switzerland, last month.

Greek reluctance to go to An-kara became evident after Presi-

Healey Presents an Election Budget

By R.W. Apple

LONDON, April 11 (NYT)-The British general election campaign was joined today with Chancellor of the Exchequer Denis Healy's presentation of his 13th national budget in four years.

Lurking beneath the statistics and the abstruse economic formulas of Mr. Healy's hourlong speech to the House of Commons was the Labor party's election strategy—the strategy that Mr. Healy, Prime Minister James Callaghan and their Cabinet colleagues hope will persuade the country to keep them in

In was not in the judgment of most politicians, a typical election-eering hudget, as full of sweetmeats as a plum pudding. Rather, it reflected a series of so-ber though slightly unarthodoxi ber (though slightly unorthodox) political judgements by the government, and it seemed to presage a campaign in which Mr. Callaghan will present himself and his party to the country as sober, steady guardians of the public interest, without the slightest trace of radi-calism about them.

Growth Decline

In her reply immediately follow-ing the chancellor's speech, Margaret Thatcher, the Conservative opposition leader, suggested that she understood the game. She concentrated her attack not on Mr. Healey's new program of modest tax cuts and relatively mild stimuli to the economy but on the decline in economic growth and the increase in unemployment during four years of Labor government.

So far as economic issues are concerned — and they will play a key role in this election, as in all British elections of the last 30 years — Labor will be talking about to-day and tommorrow, the Tories about yesterday and the day before, Mrs. Thatcher will also concentrate, no doubt, on immigration and law and order, two noneconomie topics that she has hit hard in the last two months.

The central political judgment implicit in Mr. Healy's speech was the belief that whatever else his party does, it must not allow inflation to get out of hand again. The chancellor said that the annual rate of inflation was now running at 9.5 per cent, that it would reach 7 per cent by this summer and that it would stay in that area throughout the year. What he did not say, but what he and his colleagues clearly believe, is that they will commit po-litical suicide if they fail to make good on those projections.

Attractive Options

Therefore, the budget-makers discarded some otherwise attractive options. They rejected the Liberals' appeal for bigger cuts in income taxes, to be financed in part by higher sales and excise taxes, be-The woman, who identified her- cause such taxes would inevitably raise the cost of living Similarly. they resisted a major frontal attack on unemployment because of their fears of renewed inflation.

At the same time, Mr. Callaghan is gambling that the powerful Trades Union Congress, which had wanted deeper tax cuts as a means of speeding up the economy and creating more jobs, will continue to exercise restraint in seeking wage increases. That, perhaps, is the biggest gamble of all—the unions have shown little enthusiasm for further restraints when the informal Phase III runs out July 31.

Ghanaian in Budapest

Mr. Healey scarcely mentioned wage restraints in his speech today, probably because he could offer Parliament no assurances of trade union cooperation. But he threw in several weeteners for the union chiefs. The reduction in taxes and increases in child benefits are tilted toward the working class end of the class spectrum, and Mr. Healey's refusal to make even a token reduc-tion in the 83 per cent tax charged on top incomes was described by a close associate as a concession to union sensibilities.

Finally, Labor is gambling that the 13 Liberal members of Parlia-ment, who had pressed Mr. Healey to raise indirect taxes as a means of financing bigger cuts in income taxes, will be mollified by concessions to them on some of their favorite issues, including profit-sharing and several forms of aid to small busi-

The Liberals have threatened to disrupt Mr. Healey's strategy by trying to amend the finance bill so as to force deeper tax cuts. Theoretically, if they won the support of the Conservatives and the nationalist parties, they could defeat the government, and Mr. Callaghan has said that he would call an immediate election in that event. Few political commenmentors expect such a turn of events. The much more likely result is that Labor and the Liberals will work something out, as they have done time and again during the last year. Both need time before an election, the Liberals to re-establish themselves in the public mind as an independent entity and Labor to Minister.

prove that it really has the economy inder control. If Mr. Healey's budget showed anything it showed concern on the part of the government about the part of the government about the economic situation next fall and winter, which suggests that Mr. Callaghan intends to wait. Although his mind could be changed by trends shown inthe public opinion polls and in closely watched by calladions such as the one in the elections such as the one in the Garseadden district of Glasgow on Thursday, he seems most likely to choose a polling date toward the middle of October. But it is by no means certain that the Prime Minister and his chancellor, to use a favorite phrase of British politicians, "have got it right."

One firm of independent economic consultants predicted today that, as a result of the budget, inflation would be back up to 10.2 per cent by the fall and that unemployment would be unchanged. A prominent Labor left-winger said that the tax cuts were so small as to be econom-ically and politically meaningless.

Renewed intransigence by the trade unions is a real possiblity. Nearly every pressure group in town was saying tonight that Mr. Healey had been too cautious. The pensioners wanted more, the unions wanted more, the Liberals wanted more and the Caffet and the case of the case wanted more and the Confedera-tion of British Industry wanted more. Mr. Healey thinks he is shrewder than all of them put together; whether he is right or wrong will go a long way toward determining his party's immediate fate and his own chances of succeeding Mr. Callaghan as Prime am making these cuts," Mr. Healey said. He said that this would put an additional £4,25 a week in the pockets of married workers with two children earning what for Britain is an average weekly wage of £75 ($142.25). Mr. Healey said that the tax cuts also will mean extra spending power for higher paid workers.

Contrary to expectation, Mr. Healey imposed no additional taxes on tobacco, liquor, beer, gasoline or luxury items. However, he did announce a bigger tax on cigarettes with a high tar content. He said that this would add 7 pence to the price of 20 cigarettes that now cost about 55 pence. Among other measures, Mr. Healey announced higher old-age pensions, aid for small businesses, more money to be spent on job training and job creation and more money for schools, police and prison services.

WASHINGTON, April 11 (NYT)-The Panamanian amhassador in Washington warned the Carter administration last week that his government's patience with the U.S. Senate's handling of the Panama Canal treaties was running out, according to a transcript of the meeting circulating yesterday on Capitol Hill.

The transcript recorded Ambassador Gabriel Lewis Galindo as warning Frank Moore, President Carter's assistant for liaison with Congress, that senators were "not aware of the Panamanian reality" in handling sensitive treaty issues.

"I think that at this time it is nec-

The ambassador's meeting with Mr. Moore took place at the White House last Wednesday, according to the transcript. Mr. Moore, obviously concerned that the circulation of the transcript would adversely affect the Senate vote next week on the basic Panama. next week on the basic Panama canal treaty, issued a statement challenging the accuracy of the new document in some major respects.

Despite the disclosure of the transcript and other indications of growing Panamanian opposition to the treaties, the Carter administration was trying to maintain an optimistic front about an upcoming Senate vote and the prospects for ultimate acceptance by Panama of a reservation attached to the related neutrality pact.

Senate Approval

Administration officials insisted that the odds still favored Senate approval of the basic treaty without damaging reservations and a finding by Panama, however reluctant, that it could accept a reservation that explicitly authorizes the United States to intervene by force indefinitely to keep the canal open. "It's our expectation that some-

Intense Scrutiny

It appeared obvious that among those reactions receiving intense scrutiny in the capital yesterday were those of Mr. Lewis in the transcript of his talk with Mr. Moore.

Mr. Lewis was primarily concerned, according to the transcript, with the effects on Panamanian opinion of the reservation attached to the neutrality treaty that would authorize indefinite U.S. military intervention. "Let's get to the point," Mr. Lewis was quoted as saying. The main objective of my visit is to know whether you have a rough draft of n resolution that might neutralize the effect of the DeCoocini amendment [which gives the United States the right to send troops to the canal area up to the year 2000] and, if so, when you could give it to me for my study, as the clock is now against us."

Claridge's Staff Gets Salty Over Kitchen Dispute

LONDON, April 11 (UPI)— They did not have to resort to scrambled eggs for lunch but Clar-idge's Hotel might be forgiven if the food slipped below its usually impeccable standard.

The action was over the firing of trainee chef Richard Elvidge, who says the official reason he was sacked was for allegedly putting too much salt in the ratatouille and copiers and a having a row with the lady who makes the hors d'ocuvres, or, as Claridge's put it, "for failing to car-ry out his duties in a proper manner.

Big Winner

The main change comes from all those slim skirts, with the wrap-around the big winner. The other news was all the plaids and tartans, which dominate the daytime pic-ture. Even the familiar silk shirt has been replaced by a sportier, plaid flannel one. The shawl over one shoulder, which everybody had thought dead, is back here in full force—but with uneven stripes, it looks more like a serane blanket.

Saint Laurent had an extensive leather line; lots of big leather blousons with quilted edgings and often quilted sleeves as well. Sometimes he livened it up with white Mongolian lamb, which looked like the whole animal had been thrown around the neck like a collar.

His newest way with leather, which was mostly used for evening, was embossed and looked like rich, Cordovan leather book bindings.

Otherwise, all his familiar themes were there, just revamped. The kilt has become a pleated plaid skirt. The blazer, with new padded shoulders, is shorter and boxier. The new tweed one is touched up with velhalf-cape and half-poncho.

After such a safe and classic beginning that went straight to the buyers hearts, Saint Laurent let go with evening wear that popped like firecrackers. He switched to brilliant colors and amusing and exciting styles. His most provocative was the satin mini, shaped just like an ordinary slip and wrapped around the fanny with a contrast-

The newest top was the satintrimmed, crepe-de-chine T-shirt, worn with swirling skirts, which were wrapped around the fanny with satin scarves. The naughtiest skirt turned out to be the deceptively demure and dignified wraparound that kept opening up as the model walked, exposing a tiny tri-

He also did the dress with uneven hemline, longer in the back and a winner with his older customers who won't tackle the mini. He had it both with bias, ruffle-edged chiffon and straight, slim satin tunics that looked best over pants.

Fissionable Economics

Relations hetween the United States and NATO have been troubled, recently, hy the hassle over the neutron bomb. The European group, with justice, accuses President Carterof shilly-shallying on the issue; Washington, with equal justice, accuses the Europeans of seeking to saddle the United States with full responsibility for the use, ahuse or nonuse of the controversial missile.

But while any nuclear weapons has great potential for trouble, for allies as well as enemies, the most fissionable element in NATO is neither Enhanced Radiation nor Cyprus. Rather, it is economics, as the recent meeting of the Common Market in Copenhagen demonstrated. For there enough heat was generated over financial and trade relations between the United States and Western Europe to demonstrate that the dollar may be more immediately important to the Common Market than nuclear weapons are to NATO.

As in the quarrel over the neutron bomb, there are demonstrable faults of logic on both sides. Washington wanted West Germany to stimulate its thriving but somewhat sleepy economy; Europe wanted the United States to take the lead in working toward recovery. In other words, West Germany didn't really want Mr. Carter's lead and Mr. Carter was in no position to demonstrate how Bonn was to follow that lead without risking the inflation that ravaged germany after two world wars.

Moreover, Europe wants the United States to adopt a strong energy control policy—but it does not want to accept the conditions Congress is imposing on shipments of nuclear fuel abroad. Washington hopes these conditions will reduce the risk of nuclear weapons proliferation; Europe fears they will hamper sales of nuclear plants, or increase its dependence on imported reactor fuels.

These issues should not be critical enough to weaken the common cause for which NATO exists—the protection of the Atlantic Alliance. And with the return of the Soviet Union to a good deal of Cold War rhetoric, as well as its adventures in Africa and its huge investment in arms, the idea that emerged in recent years of the dominance of economic considerations over strategic concerns has been definitely weakened. Nevertheless, for an industrial society which is hampered by unemployment, lack of growth and persistent inflation, and which confronts increasing pressure from the developing countries whence its raw materials come and where its markets are, figures of trade may be more urgent than tallies of armaments. This could seriously affect NATO.

So when the Common Market meets the United States at the Conference of Industrialized States in Bonn this summer it is to be hoped that both will be more concerned to produce constructive answers than to pose embarrassing questions for one another. Their concerns, both for economic progress and strategic security, are really the same; they need one another for both-and the world needs them. They-and it-cannot afford to be fissioned by economics.

Counting the Losses in Manila

Alas for Ferdinand Marcos, President of the Philippines. He could not have a fair election and still preserve the myth that he enjoys overwhelming popular support. Three times since he imposed martial law in 1972, Filipinos have dutifully acclaimed him in nochoice referendums. In Friday's parliamentary election, however, voters in Manila could cast ballots for opposition candidates. So many seem to have done so that the government election commission which proclaimed a pro-Marcos landslide has not dared to publish the results.

The commission's prudence seems justified. Correspondents have reported rampant ballot-counting fraud. Opposition watchers were barred. Fox Butterfield, of this newspaper, managed to slip into one voting place and observed tally clerks not even bothering to count the ballots before recording all votes for the government candidates; once discovered he was shoved down a flight of stairs. Police broke up a peaceful postelection protest march, letting the world see its 78-year-old leader, a distinguished former senator, being carted off to prison.

The opposition party faced nearly insuperable handicaps. The Philippine press did not report its rallies. Marcos's party spent much more money. The opposition leader, former Sen. Benigno Aquino, fought the campaign from a jail cell. Thus limited, the opposition chose to contest only 21 of 200 seats, all in Manila. Aquino says he has won a "moral victory," and so, perhaps, he has in compel-ling Marcos even to go through the motions of an election.

.Marcos seems to have staged the election primarily with an eye to the United States. At a time when he is asking for substantial aid, he wanted to show Washington, concerned with human rights, that he could play by the democratic rules that characterized Philippine politics before he took over. Indeed, had he risked a fair election, he might even have done passably well: During but clear; it says that the official the 45 days preceding the vote, the regime showered benefits on Manila government workers, teachers, and slum-dwellers. Yet, in the end, Marcos could not trust the voters.

Biting the Ventriloquist

Though some people may see this [Chief Matanzima's action in breaking off Transkei's relations with South Africal as a case of the dummy biting the ventriloquist, the gesture is likely to have wider significance (anyway, such bites can be painful). For South Africa's choice in Namibia lies between creating a state like Transkei which no member of the United Nations will recognize and possibly to invoke selective economic sanctions thereby, or to accept the Western plan under which a Marxist-leaning SWAPO leadership might well he ushered to victory and to quick recognition as the absolute masters of the new state. To add to South Africa's worries, the internal settlement in Rhodesiia, which Pretoria backs in its own best interests, is under severe strain, from inside and from abroad...South Africa may be able to claim that if the Transkei can so flaunt its sovereignty, a Namibia under Mr. Mudge's' Turnhalle Alliance would be no stooge Bantustan either. Were Chief Kapuuo still on the scene this might make sense, hut the murder squad which removed him, much to the convenience of SWAPO, has prevented it...Chief Matanzimas gesture helps to show white South Africans that the whole Bantustan or separate development policy stands on sand.

Either they keep scrupulously out of Transkei and risk becoming an international stamping ground or they move in and show its sovereignty is the sham the West avers...The West needs a settlement in Namibia which is acceptable to the UN guidelines and avoids the quagmire of sanctions hut does not install the sort of SWAPO dictatorship of the black proletariat which Mr. Nujoma is reported to be demanding.

Power Vacuum in Africa

Black Africa is weak, for when the colonial powers withdrew they left a vacuum. It would be nice if the Africans were to fill that vacuum themselves, with selected help from outsiders of their own choice, but things have not yet reached that stage, and because black Africa is weak it finds deeds more convincing than words. Thus, even neutural Africans regard Washington's constant pandering to progressive" forces on the continent as so much weakness, and the same applies to rhetorical, wavering "warnings" to Cuba and Moscow. The United States surely cannot allow "Africa for the Africans" to come to mean abandoning the continent to the Soviets and their Cuhan mercenaries. It would be tragic if the confrontation the United States now seems so desperately to he trying to avoid were to come about in any case at a later stage hut with the dice loaded bacause America had, in the meantime, failed to offer a credible alternative to Soviet influence.

Unity Is Barred in Workers' Paradise

By Leopold Unger

BRUSSELS-In an article in these columns, I recounted the vicissitudes of the first free Soviet labor union, "Soviet Workers Unite" (IHT, Feb.8)—a slogan and a program all in one. Today, it would be too restrictive, at least geograph-

In these last few weeks in Poland, police have been carrying out a series of unusual raids that have been perfectly coordinated and timed simultaneously in sever-al cities separated by bundreds of kilometers. And they bave been aimed at new targets.

The first of these raids were directed against students and professors participating in the independent university founded by 60 intel-lectuals to complement the official network of education and to enable the youth of Poland to become aware of its historical traditions.

Different

However, the most recent police raids are different in that they were not aimed at intellectuals but at workers. The first of these to be interrogated were Kazimierz Switon, a technician (and a member of the human-rights movement who went on a hunger strike during President Carter's visit to Warsaw in an attempt to get his two sons out of jail), Roman Ksciuzek, an electri-cian, and Wladislav Sulecki, a miner—all of them from Katowice, the industrial capital of Poland and the political fief of Edward Gierek.

These three men were taken in for a single reason: They set up a committee that has just called on Polish workers to create a "free na-tional union." Their appeal is brief unions "are dependent on the allpowerful party apparatus as well as on the government." Such unions, the appeal says, "isolates the workers and leaves them without any recourse, without any ability to de-fend themselves." These three men also said that "this situation will last until workers organize themselves in a free union and assume their own defense."

"It is only if we are united that we will be able to resist the system that exploits us," the appeal con-

Strange Words

Strange words in a country that calls itself Socialist. Strange, but not unique. One of the many clandestine publications that circulates throughout the country, Robotnik (the Worker) also has called for an independent union of workers. It as a small publication (four mimeographed pages) but it has a power-ful impact, particularly among the workers who read it almost out in the open. Robotnik, which is in its seventh onth, is published by a committee in Radom, (a city known far and wide since the workers' riots of June, 1976) and covers questions of work conditions as no official newspaper has done.

Thus, it is perfectly logical that the police would swoop down at same time on the signatories of the Katowice petition and on the staff and supporters of Robotnik. The publication's staff was seized and interrogated in Warsaw, Katowice, Grudziadz, Gdansk, Radom and even Nowa Huta, Poland's "first Socialist city," built on the outskirts of Cracow, where the police occupied and searched the homes of the workers employed by the steel mills nearby. The result of these searches: Thirty copies of Robotnik were confiscated and the instructions of the operation of a duplication machine.

This sudden fury against the workers grew out of a cumulation of incidents that have frightened the government. Above all, the call for an independent union, which is not new in Poland and which is one of the first indications of a serious crisis between the state and the workers. Each time the workers have rebelled under this regime (1956, 1970, 1976) one of their first demands was for a labor union in-dependent of the Communist party.

Clash

In December, 1970, Communist party chief Gierek was forced to negotiate with an elected workers' committee to bring an end to the strikes in Szczecin after a violent clash at the shipyards.

Furthermore, a similar appeal for an independent union was launched in the Soviet Union and in Bulgaria. The political effect of any sort of collaboration between the leaders of independent unions in these three Communist countries would be far greater than the sum total of influence of each of these groups-within those countries and beyond their borders.

All the groups, the Soviet, Bulgarian and Polish organizations.

Inching Along

Carolyn Pfaff (IHT, March 29) is wrong when she says that the length of the cricket pitch in Australia has been changed under metrication, but right in all her other comments. She should have said, perhaps, the the length of the world-famous Melbourne Cup race was changed by a few yards to please the metrication fanatics, thus immediately invalidating 110 years of racing statistics.

The same intoxicated craziness of messiahs armed with a voc in Australia. The dangerous thing about metrication is that, since it gives the illusion of progress without involving governments m special outlays or hard thinking, it is particularly attractive to politicians. But John Gorton, the prime minister at the time metrication was first introduced, has not admitted that the senate committee be set up was supposed to examine the issues, not introduce metrication. The committee, because of faulty drafting of its brief, took the other view, and by then it was too late.

Australians have never been interested in metrication. To change our road signs and " petrol our road signs and " petrol bowsers" has not resulted in one further export order (indeed many of our traditional markets trade happily with us in imperial measures, and prefer them), decreased road casualties, increased driving times between Melbourne and Sydney or made a single one of the 13 million Australians happier. Indeed metrication has made them a lot unhappier, and greatly increased the burdens of life for the older generations in particular, and it has added greatly to costs in all areas, especially building. Because Australians have adopted a "civil disobediance" attitude to metrication, it has recently been an-nounced that legal penalties will be applied where the old terms are used. This despite the promise, 10 years ago, that all metric transformation would be voluntary!

Eritrea Strife

Re the article on Cuban units fighting in Eritrea (IHT April 3) by Murrey Marder:

The author's opinion that "the war in Eritrea is a clearly a civil war" is erroneous and has no place in a piece of factual reporting.

Eritrea was federated with Ethiopia only in 1952, on the basis of a U.S.-sponsored resolution of the United Nations. In 1962—only 16 years ago—the Haile Selassie regime unilaterally annexed Eritrea against the wishes of the Eritrean people, and declared it the "14th province of the Ethiopian Empire." The Entrean people bave long been the victims of colonial and imperialist designs due to the strategic position of their country. They are manifestly different from the peo-ple of Ethiopia and do not wish to be ruled by them. "Those unfortunate people," as President Carter referred to them in a recent speech, far from being engaged in a civil war as Mr. Marder would have us believe, are fighting for self-deter-mination and liberation from foreign aggression.

The West turned a blind eye to Haile Selassie's attempts to suppress the Eritrean liberation struggle and seems ready to do likewise tion to reimpose Ethiopian rule on the Eritrean people. For the West to stand by and watch the ruthless any "triumph" in Madrid if they attempt at the reimposition of that rule is to condone the re-establishment of imperialism and the deprivation of the human rights of the Eritrean people.

Moscow Replies

In his article "Rights' Talks a 'Festival of Fear' for Kremlin" (IHT, March 24) Leopold Unger says: "It was evident to them [dissidents] that the Belgrade talks were not called for the sole benefit of dissidents." But, as you read the article further, you involuntarily ask yourself: Is it so clear to the author

Indeed, throughout the article he manages not to mention either problems of military detente in Europe, or scientific and economic cooperation between countries of that continent, or other questions that were discussed in Belgrade.

A reader who did not follow the meeting regularly enough would ask a legitimate question after Unger's article: Did the diplomats of 35 countries spend more than four months in Belgrade only to ensure conditions for so-called "dissidents?

This almost morbid obsession with concern for a small handful of people who, incidentally, are threatened with nothing if they do not violate the laws of their countries, could be left on the con-science of the author if Mr. Unger's approach to the Belgrade results was not so typical of the majority of articles in the Western press and if it did not reflect the positions of official circles in some Western

In Belgrade a number of NATO countries led by the United States made every effort to wrest from the ten principles of Helsinki, which the participating countries under-took to be guided by in their rela-tions and each of which has equal force, only one relating to buman rights and to confine all the meetings to discussing it. The Soviet Union never objected to discussion of this problem, but not in the form of interference in the internal affairs of states, as some participants in the meeting tried to do. According to their designs, Belgrade was probably to have gone down in history as the place of another battle in the "psychological war" between East and West, not as a symbol of the new stage in the development of European cooperation and promotion of security on the conti-

Needless to say, this approach was given a fitting rebuff by the socialist countries attending the meeting. Blow Your Mind

The present discussion about the pros and cons of the neutron bomb reminds me forcibly of similar arabout a little-publicized weapon, the ultrasonic. It appeared that this was proven by the Allies to be technically feasible, but was only used experimentally on cattle. The high-pitched sound emitted by the proectile was inaudible to buman beings, but their brains and that of all other animals would burst fatally in an area where the sound was deployed, and it was doubtful if any protection could be provided.

Perhaps it speaks well for the leading powers that this device was tacitly discarded from their armories, though it may possibly still have some rating in strategic diplomacy.

As a lifelong pacifist I would hope that on bumanitarian grounds all such destructive inventions will come to be outlawed by mankind before they bring our history to a terrible end.

Begin Stays In Control Of Majority

By Joseph Kraft

JERUSALEM—"We win all the arguments, but we lose all the votes," Ahba Eban, Israel's former foreign minister who is now in opposition, remarked to me the other day as we chatted in the Knesset. The complaint was overheard by Prime Minister Begin's chief assistant, Ychiel Kadishai. "Long live the majority," he cackled.

That exchange expresses exactly political conditions here in large. Despite many signs of weakness, Mr. Begin is firmly in control of his parliamentary majority, and hence of his government and the country.

Forces for fragmentation, to be sure, abound in the Begin regime. His parliamentary majority (with 78 out of 120 seats in the Knesset) comprises six different parties which are at odds on many issues. Four of the parties (the Liberals the Democratic Movement for Change and two religious factions; do not even share the enthusiasm of Begin and bis own Heru party for Jewish settlements in occupied territory and for Israeli control over all the occupied territory west of the Jordan River.

Rifts

The party rifts inside the majority are complemented by personal rivalries. Two shining military fig-ures—Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan and Defense Minister Ezer Weizman—have far more popular appeal than Begin, and enertain notions of sitting in his seat as prime minister. They are both less hawk-ish, at least in tone, than he is on settlements and the West Bank,

The official opposition (with 42) votes of which the Labor party has 32) runs athwart the government at its chief point of division—the set-tlements and the West Bank. For the first time in Israeli history, the political battle line is drawn around the issue of occupied territory with a considerable faction of the Knesset (56 of the 120 members by one authoritative count) favoring a more dovish line than the govern-

Moreover, dovish opposition finds resonance in a peace move-ment. Some 30,000 Israelis, led by decorated war veterans, met in Tel-Aviv a week ago Saturday to demonstrate for "peace now." Their chief message was that the Begin government should make territorial-concessions rather than miss the chance for a settlement with Egypt. But Israel is the last refuge of organized party politics. So when you put all these discordant elements. together and shake them up, what comes out is not an explosive mixture but more of the Begin government. lated.

Groundswell?

Even the peace movement is problematical. "It could be the beginning of a groundswell," Liova Eliav, a leading dove who belped to organize the Tel Aviv demonstration, told me. "But the demonstra-tors are in the lead group that is not in touch with the blue-collar workers. The movement could easily fizzle.

In these conditions, Begin holds the country firmly in his grasp. A policy of trying to force him from power-which some of those around President Carter undoubedly favor—is certain to backfire. A policy of driving wedges between the Prime Minister and the other government figures—which President Anwar Sadat of Egypt is now following—cannot succeed.

For better or worse, accordingly, the current peace efforts have to be worked through a government dominated by Begin. It may not be all for the worse. When I interviewed the Prime Minister the other day, it seemed clear to me that he was over the period of bitter feeling and remorse occasioned by his recent trip o Washington. He seemed in good spirits, talked in moderate terms, and looked no backwards but towards the future.

FINANCIAL NEWS AND NOTES

Cutler-Hammer Wooed by 2 Firms

Cutler-Hammer, a Milwnukee electronics compaoy, is being wooed by the giant Koppers Co. and the small Tyco Laboratoires. Koppers—as a result of a friendly deal with Cotler—is likely wind up as major stockholder, with Tyco having to be content with a big windfall profit. Cutler has already sold Koppers 650,000 shares of a new preferred—convertible into the same amount of common—or about 9.1 percent of the common stock outstanding. Koppers paid $45 a share, or $29.25 million—roughly a 30-percent premium over the price of the stock a few days before the deal became known. Koppers is seeking "a minimum of at least 20-percent ownership as soon as it is reasonably possible." Assuming Koppers pays $45 a share for the rest of its 20-percent goal, its $45 a share for the rest of its 20-percent goal, its stake would represent an investment approaching $50 million. Tyco, a diversified electronics company, last month purchased 506,400 shares, or about 8.5 percent of Cntler as an investment. Cutler says it was notified last Friday that Tyco had bought 225,400 additional shares, raising its stake in around 12 percent. If Tyco sells its holdings at $45 a share it might show a windfall profit of as much as $7.5 million.

Rohm & Haas Sees Sluggish Recovery

Rohm & Haas is "getting back to the nirty-gritty of our business" after eliminating most of its fibers operations and expects a year of sluggish recovery, Lawrence Wilson, group vice-president, reports. But he says the company is at least two to three years away from restoring profits to 1974 levels, when net equalled 10 percent of assets. This year earnings are expected in amount to 6 or 7 percent of assets. "We hope to make a healthy step back this year but we still have some big steps ahead" he adds. Rohm & Haas expects to report that first-quarter net income matched or surpassed "by a little" the operating in-year-earlier period. However, first-quarter net will definitely surpass the final net of $11.2 million, or 87 cents a share, in the year-ago quarter. He projects that 1978 oet income will rise above $50 million, or $4 a share, compared to 1977 net of $43.2 million, or Pirelli Reports $3.37 a share.

FTC Seeks Du Pont Direstiture

The Federal Trade Commission, alleging that Du Pont has tried to monopolize production of a pig-ment used to whiten paint, plastic and other prod-ucts, is seeking divestiture of two Du Pont plants that produce trianium dioxide and royalty-free li-censing of technology used by the company in pro-ducing the pigment. Du Pont chairman Irving Shapi-ro says: The complaint is wholly without basis. There are six manufacturers of trianium dioxide and Du Pont has become the leading producer in this industry as the result of proprietary technology deindustry as the result of proprietary technology developed by the company in the 1950s." He adds that the company will ask the FTC to expedite a hearing on the complaint. Du Pont accounts for more than 40 percent of U.S. production of titanium dioxide, which was valued in 1976 at more than $600 million. according to the FTC.

The move is part of a plan by bars and cathodes.

Zaire, Zambia and Peru to boost the sagging prices for copper. The metal accounts for a large part of their foreign-currency earnings but is to substantial surplus globally. The crux of the plan calls for the three nations to reduce output this year by 15 percent from 1977 lev-

The effectiveness of the plan is open to some doubt, though, Peru's reduction is "meaningless" one producer-source says, because its cut is based on capacity rather than production figures. "This means Peru is an a position to increase ex-ports even though it is cutting production," one close observer

Zaire will reduce its production by 15 percent, the sources say, but to avoid declaring "force majeure"—or circumstances beroad its control chase copper on the LME to avoid short-shipping its customers. Metal exchange warehouses are filled with more than 570,000 metric tons of

According to some trade and producer sources io Europe, Zaire already has entered the London market, possibly with financial backing from its Belgian associates.

Zambia's declaration of force majeure and Zaire's buying bave contributed to n sharp price in-crease for copper in recent weeks.

"The price rise has been caused by several factors," explains Bruce Leening, a director of Rudolf Wolff Co., an LME-member firm, "but the situation to central Africa has probably been the most import-

Some confusion remains about Zambia's intentions to cutback, however, other trade sources say. The questions are whether cuts will be in addition to those already made due to production problems and the statistical basis for the 15-percent reduction. The nation's production dropped 7 percent to 658,000 metric tons in 1977, ac-cording to the London-based World Bureau of Metal Statistics. "Zambia could simply be formaliz-ing a situation that already exists," one observer says. "On the other hand, further cutbacks could be in the pipeline. Peru's production, meanwhile, is rising primarily due to its new Cuajone operation coming on stream with the assistance of a group of U.S. producers, including Phelps Dodge and Asarco. Peru's output jumped 55 percent to 340,000 metric tons last year. Producer sources say Peru is basing its cutback on a capacity figure of 430,000 tons and therefore can produce up to 365,000 tons this year, or 25,000 tons more than in 1977. The Peruvian cutback must be seen more as a brake on the rate at which the country would otherwise have increased output," one observer comments. To the extent this brake operates, open-market offers of copper are likely to be more affected than contractual deliveries, producer sources say.

Confusion over Zambia's position and the possibility of an increase in Peruvian production has given rise to some skepticism among copper analysts about the long-term effectiveness of the pro-blending.

PARIS, April 11 (AP-DJ)-Eastern Europe's debt to the West is expected to increase 57 percent to about $66 billion by the end of 1980 from an estimated $42 billion at the end of last year, a 20-percent gain from the cod-1976 total.

The figures, which are more in-dicative than actual forecasts, are contained in a report prepared by the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development to be released at a later date. They do not include East Germany's debts to West Germany.

Based on assumptions of a 5-per-cent real annual growth for the East Europeans and 4 percent for the OECD area from 1977 through 1980, Eastern Europe's cumulated trade deficit with the West is forecast to rise from $35 billion in 1977 to $57.4 billion in 1980.

Assuming gross interest payments of 5 percent—probably a conservative estimate—and with oo account taken of capital repayments, debt servicing requirements would add just over $9 billion to the total debt, the report estimates.

However, with invisible earnings likely to reduce this amount by about $4.6 billion, and allowing for gold sales of some $2 billion, possible hard-currency loans to other socialist countries and adjustments for the effects of inflation, a range of some $62 billion to $68 billion would seem to be a reasonable estimate of Eastern net hard currency indebtedness at the end of 1980, it ress towards balanced trade in 1980. Eastern countries would still have accumulated a debt of roughly $50 billion by the end of that year, the report concludes. .

Its Loss Widens

LONDON, April 11 (Reuters)-Rio Tinto-Zinc's net profit fell 54 percent in 1977 from the previous year to £41.9 million from £91.7 million, primarily due to the pound's appreciation, the company reported today.

Net includes an extraordinary debit of £40.4 million due to currency losses during the year. Net for 1976, however, included a credit of £36.1 million due to sterling's decline, although this was reduced by exchange losses on foreign-cur-rency loans and other charges, the company said.

Earnings before extraordinary items rose to 32.68 pence a share from 32.34 pence.
The final dividend is six pence a share for a annual payout of 9.5 pence compared with eight pence the previous year.

Sales rose 8.9 percent to £1.82

pany added that the rise in sales would have been greater except for the translation effect on overseas units' revenues.

The group's copper operations were noversely affected by the de-cline in prices and zine operations were hurt by falling demand. Nearly all the group's other operations achieved increased sales as n result of higher prices.

U.S. Favors Substitutes For Oil, Gas in New Plan

WASHINGTON, April 11 (AP-DJ)—Though its original national energy plan is still hung up to Congress, the Carter administration is already drawing up a second proposal aimed at boosting energy supplies to the 1990s.

The new plan, which is being called "phase two" within the Energy Department, will not be completed for about a year. However, some major elements of the program will be sent to Congress by Energy Secretary James Schlesinger around May 1 to influence budget decisions for the next fiscal year, which starts Oct. 1.

Energy Department officials say the early outline will oot include any calls for major new legislation, though it will require normal congressional approval of proposed budget items. Instead, it will be a proposal for the investment of hundreds of millions of dollars in Energy Department funds, loan guarantees and possible small tax incentives to develop substitutes for oil and natural gas that can be used in the years between 1985 and the end of the century.

Aid to Coal Gasification, Solar Projects

Among the projects likely to be favored with federal help, according to department sources, are some large, costly demonstration plants for turning coal into n liquid or gas, the production of oil from shale deposits and the use of some methods for burning coal cleanly. Also included will be a variety of small solar energy projects.

lo general, sources say, the program will try to switch the department's research and development budget away from outlear power and other means for generating electricity and toward direct replacements for costly, dwindling supplies of oil and gas.

The administration's original energy plan, proposed a year ago, and its fiscal 1979 energy budget, proposed last January, have both been criticized in Congress as paying too little attention to the need for increasing supplies of energy, particularly substitutes for oil and natu-

The staff of 30 planners drawing up the phase-two program is work. ing on the assumption that oil may cost $25 a barrel by the late 1980s, up from $14 at present. Thus, they reason, proposals that seem uneconomical now may be viable by then.

NEW YORK, April 11 (Reuters)—Prices on the New York Stock Exchange were lower to ac-tive trading late today. Investors re-versed a five-day rally using Presi-dent Carter's speech on inflation and energy as an excuse for profit-taking, analysts said.

The Dow Jones industrial aver-

The index had rallied briefly from a

In the foreign-exchange market, the dollar fell sharply from earlier levels as participants registered general disappointment with Mr. Carter's speech.

"Once again, he hasn't said anything," one dealer said. "What we need is more firm evidence rather than his moral suasion."

Dealers added that he did not mention specific programs, as they had hoped be would. "It was another case of trying to say the right things to everyone," another dealer

Another dealer noted that the speech, although stressing the need for an energy bill, once again left out a time frame. "The dollar is weakening across the board," a dealer said just before the end of the President's press conference.

American intellectuals' ritualistic denunciations of their country, But it is much more than that. Morand he has carned it—is a master of his trude. Interwoven with his personal history are skilled digres-sions: analyses of the successive waves of expatriates to the United States, of rescotment of them by those already there, and of American traits, stereotypes and pros-pecis. Although much of the mate-rial is familiar, the style is fresh, the narrauve compelling. As a journalist, he finds people more enthral-ling than ideas. He traces the

American odysseys of Edward Bok Fiorello LaGuardia, Emma Gold-man, Erik Erikson, Thomas Mann

and the nuclear physicists who fled from Hitler. How they responded to the United States, and the United States's responses to them, are beams and study in the structure he mental hospitals and sent into exile; they thrive and prosper and buy houses in Nantucket and take

And: "America had to bail out Europe in two world wars before escaping its mastery. Then America found its own touchstones and talismans." And: "I no more want was a hedonist and now wants "to be the immigrant who makes SANCHE DE GRAMONT, the disunguished French writer, has undergone an extraoridinary transformation. He has left his homeland, become an American homeland, become an American citizen and changed his oame to Ted Morgan, ao anagram of de Gramont. He rejected, among nther anagrams, Tom Danger, Rod Magnet, Mo Dragnet and Grand Tome.) As a New Englander, I regret to report that be has chosen to settle in California, disploying that excess of zeal Talleyrand deplored in his countrymen, but perhaps it is in his countrymen, but perhaps it is appropriate. Among other institu-tions cherished by Morgan, ne de Gramont, are McDonald's hamburgers, shopping centers and Cali-fornia wines, which—nu secours!— he prefers to French vintages.

This is electrifying, and at first flush it is inexplicable. His family has lived in France for ocarly a thousand years. Its patres familia have been hereditary dukes since 1643. He himself, until his metamorphosis was a count. He re-nounced his nobidity when he be-came an American. An immigration official io New York told him: "You're the second title I've had. I had a Bourbon princess once. Tell me, what does it get you?" The newly minted Morgan said: "A cor-ner table at the Grenouille,"

That flip reply might have come from a former night rewrite man un The New York Herald Tribune. In fact, it did-the former count won a Pulitzer Prize while working out of the Trib's city room. As his tale unfolds, he explains that he has long ues to the United States. He lived in Washington as a child—his father was posted to the French Embassy there—and ottended a White House party as a guest of Harry Hopkins's daughter. Other visits to the Uoited States followed. In the 1950s he left the Sorbonne to become a Yale man, worked oo Cape Cod as a summer waiter, and was graduated from the Columbia School of Journalism.

Thus he slowly forged an American identity. By 1961, when he was wounded while reporting un the struggle in Katanga, he was half way to Morganhood. A key incident occurred then. An American consul came to his rescue, while the French envoy ignored him, Had he but known it, that is the way of diplomats everywhere. When I was laid up while covering the Indo-chinese fighting in 1952, no one from the U.S. consulate appeared at my bedside, but a French official

No argument could have dissuaded Morgan-to-be, however. He bad stars and stripes in his eyes, and sull does. He recognizes America's Puritanism, voyeurism, antiintellectualism, provincialism, exploitiveness and worship of success. But in his opinion these are offset by the country's generosity, indi-vidualism, craving for excellence and, most of all, openness. Like Erich Fromm, he believes that neurosis is a coefficient of freedom. He writes: "Anxiety is the price that must be paid for boundless opportunity...and not everyone can handle it."

This book is a tribute to the deftness with which he himself handles

Some Women Drop Pill, U.K. Study Says

LONDON. April 11 (UPI)— Women in the top social groups are giving up the contraceptive pill and its use is likely to decline because of fears about its long-term effects. according to a new study on family planning in Britain.

Io 1975, the year of the most recent detailed survey, only 21 per cent of university-educated women were on the pill compared with 43 per cent for the sample as a whole.

"Renewed anxieues obout the long-term effects of the pill, will, I predict, lead to a decrease in its use," said the author of the report. Ann Cartwright, of the Institute for Social Studies in Medical Care. She said the trend follows the pattern in-Finland, where professional women were the first to start using the pill and the first to give it up.

Many modern bidding conven-tions help to solve the problem of whether two hands will mesh well. Does a singleton face something like A-x-x-x, which is perfect, or some assortment of lesser honors that will have very limited value?

For slam purposes, the splioter bid, nr unusual jump to show a singleton or a void, solves many problems. At the part-score and game level, the diagnosis is much harder. Usually the degree of fit does not appear until the dummy comes Declarer discovers, too late, that the fit is perfect and that he should hid more or that there is considerable duplication and he has bid too

One specialized device that sometimes provides a quiek solution is the Precisioo two-diamond opening. The diagramed deal is an example.

The opening hid showed a three-suited hand short in diamonds, so South knew the hands litted perfeetly. In spite of the shortage of high-card points, be invited game with a jump to three hearts and was raised in four hearts.

If West had led either of his K-Q combinations, South would have had an easy road to 10 tricks, scoring his three side-suit aces and sev-en tricks by cross-ruffing. But the bidding suggested that a lot of ruffs were coming, so West found the best defense by leading the ace and another trump.
On the face of it, South now needed a favorable club development, either a successful finesse or an even break. Both these chances were due to fail, but there was annther possibility, as South proceeded to demonstrate.

He wan the second trump lead with the king in his hand and led his singleton spade. If South held a doubleton spade, he could not be prevented from scoring two tricks in the suit. So West rightly split his K-Q to guard against a singleton.
Dummy's spade spots were now crucial. After winning with the acc. South led the jack, throwing a club-from his hand. West won and shifted to the club ten, but South no Innger needed a finesse. He put up the ace and led the spade nine. throwing his last club.

West won with the spade ten, but that was the third and last trick for the defense. South's three diamond losers were now covered by the two remaining trumps and the established spade seven.

North and South were vulnerable. The West Dbl. Pass 34

As best as could be gathered from the statements made, these general agreements emerged in the five hours of closed-door discus-

A miracle was still wallowing in the Great Depression in 1934 when Ford Frick became president of the solution as to the way he viewed his job. He didn't think baseball needed a house dick and didn't consider market and control of the Reds was passing to Powei Crosley. The Boston Braves were virtually penniless. The Brooklyn Dodgers were in hock to the Brooklyn Trust Company. Gerry Nugent kept the Phillies together by saving string and sell-ing players. During Ford's administration the sick clubs got well, though not always in the way he

He lived to see franchises fly around like rice at a wedding while 16 major league clubs begat 10 off-spring and the majors spread south to Georgia and Texas, west to the Pacific and north into Canada.

Depression, World War II, defectors jumping to the Mexican League, the era of the bonus player who couldn't play and who couldn't be farmed out, shifting franchises, expansion in the majors and atrophy in the minors — as league president and commissioner. Ford was there through it all. He was still there when the owners adopted a draft of high school and college kids but he had retired be-fore the advent of 10-man baseball and before Andy Messersmith and Dave McNally shot the reserve system full of holes.

It would have been interesting to hear Ford's thoughts about the multimilion-dollar market in free agents, for as long as 20 years ago he considered the reserve system a repugnant necessity. However, his health had deteriorated in recent years and he didn't make the base-ball scene often.

The Soccer Scene

When the Part Far Exceeds the Whole

By Rob Hughes

LONDON, April 11 (1HT)-An old chestnut finds new and fertile ground on both sides of the Atlan-tie this week: Can an individual be bigger than the team?

The answer always used to be a simple"no." The man who scores goals was often the headline figure, but he above all could never afford to lose sight of the obvious fact that he could only capitalize if others created situations for him, and if yet others prevented the opposition from outscoring his team. But soccer's needs in America are, as the absence of Pele will show with indecent haste at the turnstiles, still heavily pinned on the supporter. That is made two the superstar. That is why two NASL clubs, the Minnesota Kicks and Detroit Express, are vying with each other to pay Trevor Francis a fortune of $50,000 to play just 20 games for them this summer.

Two Games Lost Francis. 23, is arguably England's most skilled forward, so it is not surprising the American teams should call him in. What is surprising is that his club, Birming-ham City, should agree, particular-ly as the contract will deprive it of his services for two games next

Many European clubs are becoming worried by the American poaching. They don't begrudge their stars a summer's wages and they believe that soccer U.S.-style is relaxed compared to the exhausting home schedules. Yet isn't it signifcant that Johan Cruyff, undoubtedly the most gifted player in the world, always turned down an American summer, saying "I need the break from playing. I am not so physically strong that 1 can play every week of the year. 1 would go

In Birmingham's case, the club is trying to buy its favorite son's loy-alty. Now Jim Smith, the replacement goal it surrendered to Italy's Jumanager, admits: "I am allowing Trevor to go simply to keep him happy at Birmingham. I still believe Borussia can overcome Liverpool, despite the English club's recent winning ways. despite Liverpool's indomitable home record in 15 years in Europe, and despite Simonsen's injury.

But Helmul Schoen, West Cermany's manager and the mos experienced soccer coach in the world, suggested to me last week: "It depends on Simonsen, If he plays, Borussia can do it." And if not? Is Schoen subscribing to the "individual bigger than the team" theory? No, there are

And so simple. All that happens is that you are tied into the computer. This scares many people when they hear they are about to They fear the guillotine is faster, they say. Fear is the Baker handmaiden of ignorance. The fact is that nothing is faster than the computer, with the exception of a handful of New York literary agents. What people fail to understand about the computer is that it is not some sinister monster with plans to take over the universe, but simply a fancy ver-sion of the old-fashioned adding

Computer scientists have been trying to explain this for years, yet persist in refusing to understand. In fact, nothing could be simpler. To illustrate, let's assume that I had already been automated before composing the first sentence of this exercise: "I am to be automated soon."

Under the out-of-date technique, writing this simple six-word sentence would take four hours. A typewriting machine would be placed on a flat surface and 13 sheets of blank paper rolled through the carriage until one was found that wanted to be written on. No easy task. The quality of blank paper gets worse every year. Some days you have to throw away 30 or 40 sheets that are unwilling to be written on.

Once automated, bowever, you are free of the tyranny of incom-petent and rebellious paper. In-stead of a typewriting machine, an adding machine is placed before you. I speak figuratively, of course, since the adding machine, or computer, is actually kept in a cellar or an attic somewhere. It likes soli-

By Russell Baker NEW YORK—I am to be automated soon. Everyone says it is one of the most up-to-date expension. When tuned in properly, it will send a sentence like "I am to he automated soon" to the adding machine. In less time than it takes to blink, the adding machine will add up the sentence and inform you that it contains six words and 20 letters.

> It works as follows: The writer sits in front of the TV screen, turns on the juice and stares for a long

> He fiddles with the keyboard The screen has something like a typewriter keyboard instead of the usual tuning knobs. When activated, it produces tiny bright green let-ters which look slightly deformed. He wonders if the management has deliberately hired a handicapped alphabet for bumanitarian reasons or because it will work for lower wages than handsome, rohust alphabets.

He despairs because none of this is worth writing about and worries that the adding machine may be adding up the fruitless bours he is spending on low-productivity thoughts and planning to distribute the humiliating figures throughout the suburbs next morning. He de-spises the day he made the fool's decision that writing was better than working, and envies airline reservations elerks. No bumiliations there. He would simply ask the adding machine for a coach seat to Cleveland, and the machine would immediately give him one. He activates his keyboard. Give me a coach seat to Cleveland," the arthritie green letters say. The machine immediately notifies him that his sentence contains seven words and 27 letters.

He sneaks out for a beer, remembers where he bas hidden an old typewriter, guiltily begins to compose. "I am to be automated The thing completed and committed to memory, he returns to his terminal, punches the keyboard.

Americans Go on a Magazine Binge

By A. Kent MacDougall

NEW YORK—When people dream of starting new magazines, they do not dwell on the $30 million that Henry Luce and his Time Inc. poured into Sports Illustrated before it broke even, or the $13 million that Bob Guccione has dropped on Pensbouse's sickly sister Viva, or that most new magazines die in

They think instead of how Time Inc. seems likely to make back on fast-starting People magazine more than it lost on Sports fliustrated, of how Hugh Hefner started Playboy on $7,000 and laid out the first issue on a card table in his modest apartment, of the prestige and the glamour of publishing a glossy magazine.

For more and more would-be magazine moguls, dreams are turning into reality as Americans goes on a new-magazine binge. Several hundred new consumer magazines are expected to start this year, on top of the 488 new titles that Folio: The Magazine for Magazine Management counted in 1975-77.

New interests and lifestyles are generating many of the entries. There is The Runner for fitness buffs, Moped Biking for those who prefer to ride, Wet for bathing enthusiasts, Outside for outdoors activists, Games for puzzle fans, Blue Boy for homosexuals, fuspiration for the born-

Half a dozen new left-of-center magazines are busy analyzing the country's political, economie and social ills. Among them are Mother Jones and Inquiry, both published in San Francisco, and Seven Days and Politicks and Other Human Interests, published in New York.

Movement

City magazines continue to proliferate as middle-class families move frequently and need basic information on shopping and other matters that used to come from staying put in a par-ticular neighborbood. Media Decisions, a husiness publica- at $1.75, Quest-78 at $2, Mariah

Oddly enough, television, which helped kill the big general-interest Saturday Evening Post, Look and Life by siphoning off readers and advertisers, is actually stimulating new maga-zines. TV soap operas provide the plots that Soap Opera Digest and its ilk synopsize. TV enter-tainers provide grist for the per-sonality mills of People and Us.

More importantly, television leaves it to magazines to treat minority concerns, special inter-ests and hobbies. Little wonder, then, that American adults are reading 17 per cent more maga-zines on the average than they did in 1950 before TV became Shifting patterns of advertising also favor magazines. With television time in tight supply and ad rates rising rapidly, many advertisers are switching part of their budgets to magazines. Advertisers spent 13.5 per cent more in TV last year than in 1976, but magazine ad spending jumped 21 per cent to score the biggest gain of any medium.

The Targets

Advertisers like the fact that new magazines commonly target their editorial fare at the affluent, urban and suburban free-spending young adults whom advertisers most want to reach. For instance, Your Place, a new himonthly, goes after men and women in ther 20s with such stories as "Living Together: Should You Worry About Forever?

However, advertisers shun new magazines with cootroversial contents, such as sex and ondity, and with low circulations. These must rely for most of their revenue oo readers who. happily for the new magazines, are paying prices that would have been unthinkable even for established magazines just a couple of years ago. Heavy Metal, a new adult comie book, is priced at $1.50 a copy, Human Nature tion for the advertising industry. at $2.50, L'Officiel-USA at counted 38 new city and regional s2.95, magazines in 1976-77.

Some new magazines with litthe income from either advertisers or readers nevertheless make it by keeping expenses to a minimum. An old hand at this is Bob Anderson. As a 17-year-old Kansas high school cross-country runner. Anderson started Distance Running News on $100. He got runners to contribute articles free and did most of the work himself, hand-stapling, folding and mailing the first 28-page issue to 300 subscribers.

As Distance Running News caught on, it grew fatter and slicker, was renamed Runner's World, and became the nucleus of a complex of profitable publishing and sporting-goods mail-order operations that today employs 115 persons in Mountain View, Calif. and racked up revenues of $4.7 million last year.

The 30-year-old Anderson, who still runs 20 miles a week. puts out magazines on biking. soccer, canceing and cross-country skiing in addition to Runner's World and is starting two more running magazines. On The Run and Marathoner. Clearly, he has eaught the tailwind of the nationwide fitness fervor.

Requirements

Shoestring-to-success stories such as Boh Anderson's are possible because of the relatively low capital requirements of mag-azine publishing. Unlike daily newspapers, which usually need their own printing facilities, magazines are produced by commercial printers. And printers eager for new business often extend credit to new magazinessometimes more credit than is

Beside credit from its printer a new magazine to be sold on ocwsstands and in stores can usually negotiate an advance payment of part of its expected proceeds from each issue's sale The advances are made by the national distributor handling distribution of the magazine to local wholesalers and retail-store

The most important source of advance payments, however, is the subscriber. Magazines are one of the few businesses that collect from customers before delivering a product or service. The money a subscriber sends in is the magazine's to use, interestfree, any way it likes. New magazines typically use it to pay for more mailings to still more po-tential subscribers.

The system has potential for abuse. The Magazine Publishers Association says it has received complaints from subscribers to a girlie magazine that suspended publication after a single issue and to an opera magazine that delivered no issues at all. The complaints have been referred to legal authorities on suspicion that subscribers were bilked.

Reasons for failure are almost as varied as the magazines that fail. Leading causes include underfinancing inexpert management, insufficient advertising and public indifference. Conceiving and executing an editorial concept that catebes or with both readers and ad-vertisers is so difficult that even old pros who have struck it rich with one or two magazines often fail with subsequent ones.

One way to avoid the agony and the uncertainy of creating a new magazine concept is to imi-tate an already successful one. Nearly every successful magazine has spawned imitators. People has its Us. Cosmopolitan has its New Dawn, whose first cover showed a young woman ripping a copy of Cosmopolitan in half.

Playboy has probably been imitated more often than any magazine started since World War If. There is Penthouse. Hustler, Genesis, Gallery and several dozen others living and dead. The publishers of some of these have aped Hugh Hefner's ostentatious lifestyle as well.

PEOPLE: Betty Fora in mospitue For Overmedication' Betty Ford in Hospital

A "problem with medication" was given as the reason when Mrs. Gerald Ford, wife of the former president, was admitted to Long Beach, Calif., Naval Hospital, a week after her husband had reported her struggling with an arthritic problem unrelated to her 1974 cancer operation and subsequent che motherapy. Betty Ford, 60, said in a statement from the hospital that a statement from the hospital that she had gotten to a point where she was "overmedicating" herself: "It's an insidious thing and I mean to rid myself of its damaging effects." After her admission to the hospital's rehabilitation center, a spokesman there spoke of "a dependence" but denied than an addiction was involved. Ford, who canceled some speeching engagements last week, was in New York over the weekend for such an engagement and reportfor such an engagement and report-ed to the audience that his wife had been responding well to treatment.

A London court fined Princess Anne's husband, Mark Phillips, £15 ($28.50) for speeding—his second driving offense in little more than a year. Phillips did not appear at Bow Street court but pleaded guilty through his counsel for driving 60 miles an hour in an area of London near the House of Commons. Last March, Phillips was fined £30 for a highway speeding offense.

in Detroit, Ruth Carter Stapleton the evangelist sister of President Carter, complained that being the sister of the President was having a deleterious effect on ber ministry, Mrs. Stapleton said that she was besieged by celebrity-hunters look-ing for a handshake rather than by seekers of religious fulfillment. Her situation is further exacerbated, she said, by her friendship with Larry Flynt, the owner of Hustler magazine, who was shot in Georgia shortly after he said he had undergone a religious conversion with Mrs. Stapleton's help. She said she had cut the length of her evangelical meetings from three days to one and in recent weeks had canceled nine meetings. Mrs. Stapleton said that many people who genuinely wanted her spiritual help avoided her meetings because of the celebrily-watchers attracted to them.

Jorge Ortiz, the Bolivian tin tycoon, is in London to arrange for the sale of his famous collection of art, a sale made necessary in large part by a $2-million ransom paid to the kidnappers of his 5-year-old daughter last October. Ortiz, whose Polynesian items are regarded as among the finest in the world in a private collection, said that the Ortiz family fortune "is nothing now compared to what it was at one time." It was once one of the world's great fortunes, he said, "but that is in the past and we have to live in the present." The fortune was considerably decimated by Ortiz's payment of the ransom to the kidnappers, who abducted Graziella Ortiz-Patino when she was on her way to school near Geneva on Oct. 3. Eleven days later, after the ransom had been paid, she was re-leased unharmed. The sale of the Ortiz collection, scheduled at Sotheby Parke Bernet in June, is expected to yield $13 million.

Sixty-four-year-old Charles Bradley told a small-claims court in Dubuque, fowa, how unnerving it was to discover first a strange taste and then a mouse in a bottle of Coca-Cola he bought from a vend-ing machine. Officials of the bottling company argued that the mouse could not have gotten into the bottle because the bottling plant uses high-pressure cleaning and filling procedures. But the court ruled in Bradley's favor, and he is $1,000 richer.
